

BING DAWE

Towards Repair/Layering a river landscape with galaxiidae and trees

Towards Repair/Layering a river landscape with eels and trees

These works are new works in a recent series collectively titled Towards Repair which illustrate plant propagation techniques in a generic way to highlight a landscape in need of repair. In these works the propagation technique is layering and has been applied to a river landscape. The importance of riparian planting to the health of the river and the river fauna is emphasised. These works continue my interest and concern for environments which are constantly under pressure from human abuse. These works invite a conversation about ways for repair.